

EMERGING IDEAS

THE VIEW FROM THERE

Grasping the complexities of the Middle East can be challenging, especially when U.S. television news often covers international issues in a passing sound bite. Enter Mosaic news. The daily half-hour TV newscast lets Americans watch a compilation of the news Middle Eastern viewers see themselves — unfiltered, unvarnished, and translated into English. The original reports, from both state-controlled and private broadcasters, are watched by 280 million people in 22 countries, including Qatar and Iran. “We try to represent as many perspectives as possible,” explains producer Jamal Dajani. The Peabody Award-winning program is available via satellite on Link TV and online at <http://linktv.org/mosaic>.
